

Benefits of Rehab

No longer just the family pet, dogs and cats have become full-fledged furry family members and it's expected that they should have access to many of the same medical treatments as people do. ☐ Indeed, rehabilitative treatments do have as profound an effect on our four-legged friends as they do on us. ☐

Just like physical therapy for humans, veterinary rehabilitation can:

- Reduce recovery time after injury and/or surgery
- Decrease pain and inflammation
- Increase range of motion to help with easier movement during daily activity
- Lead to a longer and better quality of life for your pet
- Aid in weight loss for overweight and elderly patients
- Increase muscle tone and cardiovascular health

These are just some of the most common benefits that rehabilitation can bring to a pet. And for the devoted family, adding more years to their pet's life - and more life in their years - is a benefit beyond measure.

Take it from our own patients' families - read our Success Stories ☐ now to see how therapy at Healing Paws impacted them.